Mrs. Pearl Henke, Americanism chairman gave a beautiful illustration of "Old Glory" and also read a poem named, "The Rose".

A letter was received by Mrs. Henke from Buddy Berg, the Tinley boy whom the Auxiliary sponsored for one week at Boys' State, Springfield, Ill. Buddy said he liked Boy's State Camp very much and gave a description of his daily work and habits there. His office was State Police. He expressed the wish to be able to go again next year.

Our protege at Normal, Ill., Billy George, has a birthday coming and a small gift will be sent to him from the Unit by our Child Welfare chairman, Mrs. Ceithaml.

Rehabilitation —Mrs. Rowden, brought home from one of the hospitals a wall rack which was awarded Mrs. Flannery. A card of thanks was received by Mrs. Rowden from Peoria for gifts sent the boys there expressing appreciation. Mrs. Ceithaml is leading in the silk hose contest. MUST PUBLISH REPORTS OR LOSE TAXES Township supervisors, school treasurers and other town and county officers who serve as custodians of public funds in the future will be compelled to publish their annual reports of receipts and expenditures of public funds before they can receive their share of tax money from the county treasurer, according to a bill that has just passed the Illinois State Legislature.

For many years the law has required such custodians of public funds to publish their reports annually, but many such officials have refused or neglected to do so on one pretext or another unless they were prosecuted by some interested taxpayer who was concerned about the use of public money. The new law requires the county treasurer to exact a certificate of publication of such reports before he will be permitted to issue to the treasurer of any subdivision of government its share of tax money collected by the county collector. On his failure to exact such a certificate, the county treasurer would be liable to a heavy fine.

This bill was designed in interest to the taxpayers in order that they may know from year to year who is receiving the funds paid out of their treasury and from what sources the funds are received.

The new law also specifically stipulates that the report shall show in detail the amount of money received and from what source received; the amount of money expended and to whom paid. This will abolish the practice of some custodians of publishing only skeletonized reports.

faithful workers who stood by her and thanks to the ladies who worked as cashiers.

Fidac program starts with a greeting to all our sister Fidac naons. Our president represented the United States with the Fidac chairman as Greece. A junior member acted as Greece and also played the Greek National Anthem while the nations marched in. After the presentation of the nations the Greek hymn was sung in unison, Miss Blanche Carr playing the piano.

Greece was the hostess nation for the evening. A study of Homer, the greatest lyric writer of Greece and some of his greatest characters in the Iliad and the Odessey were enjoyed.

After the close of the meeting the Olympic games were represented by a chariot race, all taking part by eating the little golden chariots. Apollo drove every night and morning in the clouds. The prize was the chariot they ate. These chariots were made of picoted orange shells filled with ambrosia, (foods for the Gods) mixed with nuts topped with white fluffy coconut and golden wheels of orange slices. The chariot was drawn by four animal crackers harnessed in gold ribbon. Appollo, himself, was just a toothpick. Macaroons and coconut cookies were served also. Of course ambrosia was accompanied by nectar. I am sure we were all intoxicated with grape-juice. By and by as the Gods did, who visited Zeus, all returned home from the clouds to earth.

Next meeting will be July 9. Come and see who wins the hose contest.

'Way Back When

By JEANNE

GERTRUDE STEIN DROVE AN AMBULANCE

PERHAPS your brother or your father went over to France with the A. E. F. and saw a rattling old French ambulance jolting over the shell-torn roads with two women on the driver's seat. One, a husky, healthy woman with hair clipped short and heavy masculine shoes, was Gertrude Stein; the other, tall and angular and more feminine, was her secretary, Alice B. Toklas.

Gertrude Stein was born in Allegheny, Pa., in 1872. Much of her childhood, until she was five years old, was spent in Europe. Then her family moved to California, and she was raised in San Francisco and Oakland. After attending Radcliffe college, she went to medical school at Johns Hopkins. She settled in Paris in 1903, and the world may have lost a great surgeon as she abandoned the scalpel to carve out a career as an author.

She paid to have her first book printed, because no publisher would accept it. Wide recognition came to her with the publication of her book, "The Autobiography of Alice B. Toklas," in which she uses her secretary's life story as a means of praising her own accomplishments. There she asserts that her book, "The Making of Americans," is the greatest ever written. Her motto, "A rose is a rose is a rose," and some of her sentences such as "Toasted Susie is my ice cream," or this one from her play, "Four Saints in Three Acts" (there were actually many more saints and there were four acts), "If a magpie in the sky on the grass alas can alas and to pass the pigeon on the grass alas and the magpie in the sky on the sky and to try and to try alas on the grass alas the pigeon on the grass the pigeon on the grass and alas" have made many critics think that the strain of ambulance driving may have been too much for her.

FANNIE HURST LIVED LIKE HER CHARACTERS

HAVE you read "Back Street," or "Five and Ten"? Have you wept and thrilled over the shop girls of Fannie Hurst's short stories? Fannie Hurst, herself, was once a waitress, a nursemaid, a salesgirl, and a sweatshop worker. Had you met her then, you could hardly have known that some day she would be hailed throughout America as a leading novelist.

Fannie Hurst was born in Hamilton, Ohio, in 1889. She was raised in St. Louis, Mo., an only child who had many lonesome hours for reading. At fourteen, she submitted blank verse to the Saturday Evening Post. Spurred on by ambitions, she wrote until three and four in the morning while a student at Washington university, came to New York to Columbia university, and for years wrote without having a single story accepted. From the Saturday Evening Post, alone, she received 36 rejection slips.

Her first encouragement came from R. H. Davis, editor of Munsey's and success followed swiftly. Her first book, a collection of short stories, was published in 1914, and her works appeared regularly thereafter, including "Mannequin" in 1926, which was awarded a prize of $50,000 by a moving picture corporation.

Fannie Hurst now lives in luxury in New York city. A handsome woman, she loves fine furs, rare laces, and brilliant colors. What a contrast to the humble scenes that made possible her successful interpretation of shoppirl hearts and souls are the rich surroundings her persevering ambition has won for her!

Washington Digest

National Topics Interpreted By WILLIAM BRUCKART NATIONAL PRESS BLDG. WASHINGTON, D. C.

Washington.—Two actions of sections of the congress lately deserve more than ordinary attention.

Congress Makes News

One of these was probably as courageous a position as any group of senators ever has taken. The other action—by majority of the house—was shot through with the utmost cowardice and selfishness.

Lately, a group of senators, nearly all Democrats, took their political lives in their hands and delivered to the senate a report from its judiciary committee advising defeat of President Roosevelt's proposal to add six new justices of his own choosing to the Supreme court of the United States.

In my time in Washington, I believe I can say without qualification, there never has been a committee action in the house or senate in which the President, as the leader of the dominant party, received such a castigation on a legislative proposal as was given Mr. Roosevelt by Democrats who constituted the majority of the senate judiciary committee. They did not mince words in any respect. Whatever may be the merit of Mr. Roosevelt's proposal to add six justices of his own choosing to the highest court, the majority report of the judiciary committee left no stone unturned in disclosing objections to the proposal as opponents of the court reorganization scheme see them.

Almost on the same day that senate Democrats were, in effect, breaking or revolting from the President's leadership, the Democratic majority in the house killed off a proposal for new taxes in the District of Columbia that would have resulted in taxing the salaries of representatives and senators and their office staffs. They were brazen about it. They were not going to vote an income tax upon themselves and they made no effort to conceal their reasons for refusing to accept the recommendations of a special tax subcommittee which was acting for the permanent committee in the house of the District of Columbia.

The District of Columbia committee, examining the budget for the seat of the federal government, was confronted with a deficit in the district finances and instructed its tax subcommittee to develop new sources of revenue in order that the District of Columbia might not get into debt. Among the taxes proposed was a tax on income of residents of the District of Columbia, which is synonymous with Washington, and it provided for taxing earnings here whether the person who earned the income was a resident of the capital city or not.

That was too much. The majority in the house of representatives just could not take it. They voiced their objections openly and, being superior in numbers to those who believed that income in the District of Columbia should be taxed, they forced the tax bill back to the District of Columbia committee for revision. Indeed, they went further. The line of criticism of an income tax that would touch the sacred salaries of congressmen and senators was such as to have the effect of forcing the committee to bring in a tax bill that would increase the tax on property in the federal area. Now, it is a fact that few members of the house and a very small number of senators have bought residences in Washington. They usually live in apartments or hotels or lease homes for the period that congress is in session. Consequently, a real estate tax will not concern most of the representatives and senators.

The indictment brought against the President's court plan by the senate judiciary committee was quite unusual in many respects.

Court Plan Report

In the first instance, it was approximately fifteen thousand words in length; being in that regard probably the longest and most comprehensive analysis that any congressional committee ever has made of a piece of legislation. Certainly, it is the most extensive examination to be included in a committee report in the last quarter of a century.

Every argument advanced by the administration in support of the plan was picked to pieces and held up to public gaze; every possible reason for expansion of the court by the addition of six new justices was scrutinized and denounced and, then, the committee put forth some of its own ideas.

"It applies force to the judiciary," the committee said in a sentence that constituted one paragraph and thereby was emphasized.

"The only argument for the increase which survives analysis," the report added, "is that congress should enlarge the court so as to make the policies of this administration effective."

The bill was found by the seven Democrats and three Republicans who constituted a majority of the senate judiciary committee, to be "a needless, futile and utterly dangerous abandonment of constitutional principle." It charged that the "American system" of independence of the courts would be violated and that if the bill were to be enacted into law, "political control" over the judiciary branch of the government would pass into the hands of the President.

With the presentation of this terrific attack on the bill to the senate, a second unusual circumstance developed. Those Democrats who were opposed to the President's proposal decided to go about the job of fighting the measure on the floor in a manner seldom seen in the congress. These opponents from the Democratic ranks got together and chose Senator Wheeler of Montana as leader of the Democratic opposition to the Democratic President's court revision program. They gave him full authority to act, including the selection of a steering committee, a committee on strategy, to aid him.

Thus, in the senate now we have three major leaders. Senator Wheeler will speak for the court opposition; Senator Robinson of Arkansas as the leader of the Democratic party in the senate will lead the fight for passage of the court bill; and Senator McNary of Oregon will head up the Republicans as usual. Since all of the Republicans and Independents excepting only Senator La Follette, Progressive, of Wisconsin, are opposed to the court revision plan, Senator McNary and Senator Wheeler are working hand in glove against the regular Democratic line-up headed by Senator Robinson.

It appears that the President is going to be badly defeated on this piece of legislation, but it is too early to be sure. Mr. Roosevelt is a powerful figure and he has political knowledge that must be described as remarkable. He has with him in the senate some exceedingly able political strategists. It is thus a battle of wits.

Mr. Roosevelt has said several times that he will accept no compromises. There is a very definite feeling at the Capitol, however, that the President will be glad to have a compromise if he can get one and save the bill from complete wreckage. On the other hand, Senator Wheeler and his strategy committee have announced in no uncertain terms that they will defeat the bill or any compromise that is offered. Time alone can answer the question of what will come out of the President's proposal. At this writing, the odds certainly are against the President on the proposition.

Speaking of taxes and the selfishness that was evident in the house action, as mentioned earlier, the joint house and senate committee that is now under way. This committee, made up of five representatives and five senators has begun a search to find out how taxpayers avoid taxes or reduce the amounts they would otherwise have to pay by various trick schemes. The committee has been given fifty thousand dollars with which to make the investigation and it is receiving able assistance from Under Secretary Roswell Magill and other Treasury experts on taxation.

Hunt Tax Evaders

Contrary to the outlook when Mr. Roosevelt released a vicious attack on tax dodgers and tax avoiders, this committee is getting down to real business and there is every reason to believe it will be able to recommend to congress changes in the law that will stop some of the schemes and tricks to which large taxpayers have resorted.

I have sat in on a number of the hearings thus far, including the opening session when Secretary Morgenthau made the opening statement and disclosed to the satisfaction of everyone that he was not conversant with the problem at hand. Like the President, Mr. Morgenthau attempted to place the tax problem confronting the government on moral grounds. His statement did not click with the committee at all. With two or three exceptions, the committee members recognized the problem as purely a question of law and Senator Pat Harrison, Democrat of Mississippi, vice chairman, said that there was no point in making the investigation "a Roman holiday." Therefore, the thing settled down very quickly to an earnest study of cases where men have resorted to various kinds of subterfuges of law, to reduce their tax liability.

In this connection, it seemed to me that too much credit cannot be given Under Secretary Magill who apparently is anxious to get to the bottom of the problem.

The Star Spangled Banner

UNDER the starry flag that waves over this fair land, every citizen is a king, and there is no avenue to wealth and fame, position and power, that is not open to every child of the Republic.—W. A. Prossner.

THE Star Spangled Banner was designated as the national anthem by an Act of Congress, approved on March 3, 1931. It was written by Francis Scott Key after he had witnessed the British bombardment of Fort M'Henry in Baltimore, in 1814. The words of this stirring song were sung to the tune of "Anacreon in Heaven" and immediately became popular and it was regarded as the national anthem though it was not made legally so until 1931.

LIBERTY, one of two treasured BELLS

TWO of the bells which played important roles in early American history — pealing warnings or glad tidings during the nation's battle for survival — are treasured by Philadelphia, observes a Philadelphia United Press correspondent.

Most valuable of the two from historical standpoint is the world-famed Liberty bell, which was tolled when first public announcement was made of the Continental Congress' adoption of the Declaration of Independence on July 4, 1776.

The bell had pealed for anniversaries and festivals until 1835, when it cracked while being rung for the funeral procession of Chief Justice John Marshall of the United States Supreme court.

Other bells identified with America's struggle against foreign encumbrances are the chimes in the steeple of Old Christ church. During the Revolutionary war they were removed and secreted to block possible attempts of English soldiers to melt them for ammunition.

The Orator of the Revolution

"Give Me Liberty or Give Me Death."—Patrick Henry.

"FORBID it, Almighty God!" thundered Patrick Henry in the Virginia Convention at Richmond, in 1775, in a speech typical of "the explosive temper of the time."—"I know not what course others may take, but as for me, give me liberty, or give me death!" The orator of the Revolution had been found. It was Patrick Henry who established before the American people that government was a contract between King and people and that the violation of such contract by the King was truly an illegal act.

Where First American Flag Was Made

THE Betsy Ross House in Philadelphia, where the first American flag was made, is being restored to its colonial condition, through the generosity of A. Atwater Kent. For many years this house has been visited by thousands of tourists annually.

Falling rapidly into ruin, the dilapidated condition of the patriotic shrine was brought to Mr. Kent's attention through a newspaper article which pictured the falling plaster, the leaking roof and general condition of disrepair.

The living-room, shown, still has the gorgeous fireplace with white mantel framed with the original blue Dutch tile. The room was originally decorated in blue.

"Well, you'd better correct it before you post the letter."
"Certainly. By the way, which one will I correct?"

Need of Self-Control

Health and happiness are generally looked on as enviable gifts, whereas the fact is that, to a large extent, they are duties; only we prefer not to recognize this, as it involves such an unpleasant amount of self-control, mental and bodily.—L. H. M. Soulsby.

Umpires—John Balaz, Maxwell
Williams.When Tinley Played HomerPat Homerdine set a new season's strike out record last Sunday when he whiffed 20 of the bewildered Homer players while his mates were burying two Homer hurlers under a seventeen hit barrage.All that potential hitting power that Manager Baldwin's aggregation has shown on paper came into reality Sunday when hits were fired in all directions and runs aplenty crossed the platter. While his mates were enjoying a field day at bat Pat Homerdine enjoyed a field day in his own way by proceeding to shut out the Homer team, allowing only four singles, no man reaching third base, and striking out twenty of the batters to face him. It was all Homerd-ine and Bennett in the record books since Bennett besides his sterling catching performance proceeded to lead the Tinley hitters with three line singles. Outside of Marti's and Imhoff's sparkling plays on two potential hits the Tinley defense was given a rest while Pat diligently went about mowing down the Homerites.The early innings of the game saw neither pitcher yielding much in the way of hits. The Tinley guns barked in the fourth when one run was pushed over by virtue of Marti's single, Bennett's single and Greco's sacrifice fly. In the fifth the Tinley bats were loaded with dynamite and they fairly shelled Migawa off the mound while scoring five times. Migawa stood the barrage until the seventh when with bases full he turned over the pitching duties to West.
After being touched for four more hits West managed to get the rampant Tinley Parkers retired.Sunday, the Fourth of July, is an open date in league competition and Tinley will take this opportunity to battle their ancient rivals, the Chicago Buddies. Fans who have followed the team in recent years will recall the many stirring battles staged by these two teams. Now Tinley, with more power than ever, will seek to avenge past defeats with Pat Homerd-ine doing the hurling. Don't miss this special Fourth of July attraction at Schmidt's Field next Sunday.
Game time is 2:30 P. M.

CHRISTIAN SCIENCE CHURCHES

"CHRISTIAN SCIENCE" was the subject of the Lesson-Sermon in all Churches of Christ, Scientist, on Sunday, June 27.The Golden Text was, "The earth shall be full of the knowledge of the Lord, as the waters cover the sea" (Isaiah 11:9).Among the citations which comprised the Lesson-Sermon was the following from the Bible: "My doctrine shall drop as the rain, my speech shall distil as the dew, as the small rain upon the tender herb, and as the showers upon the grass: Because I will publish the name of the Lord: ascribe ye greatness unto our God. He is the Rock, his work is perfect: for all his ways are judgment: a God of truth and without iniquity, just and right is he" (Deuteronomy 32:2-4).The Lesson-Sermon also included the following passages from the Christian Science textbook,
"Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," by Mary Baker Eddy:
"All Science is divine. Human thought never projected the least portion of true being. . . . No human pen nor tongue taught me the Science contained in this book, Science and Health; and neither tongue nor pen can overthrow it. This book may be distorted by shallow criticism or by careless or malicious students, and its ideas may be temporarily abused and misrepresented; but the Science and truth therein will forever remain to be discerned and demonstrated" (p. 126) 110.ST. PETER'S EVANGELICAL

W. P. A. Workers Are Asked To Take Farm Jobs

To meet an anticipated demand for farm labor throughout Illinois, State WPA Administrator Charles E. Miner has ruled that workers now on WPA projects who accept farm jobs, even though of short duration, will be reassigned immediately upon the termination of their private work.

Administrator Miner said the authority for his ruling was granted in a recent order from Federal Administrator Harry L. Hopkins, which said that WPA workers who accept private jobs and lose the jobs through no fault of their own will be reassigned to WPA providing they are eligible.

It has been reported to WPA, Mr. Miner said, that recent rains have delayed corn farming to such an extent that work in the corn fields will overlap into the harvesting of small grains, a situation which promises to create a greater demand for farm labor.

"It has always been WPA's policy to release workers from WPA rolls in rural areas during the farm operating seasons providing full time jobs are offered," the administrator explained. "WPA has constantly urged that farmers requisition labor through the local branch of the state employment service, which is empowered to assign WPA workers to private jobs. If farm jobs are available, WPA workers who are acceptable to farm employers must take them under employment service procedures."

He said that there has been a reluctance on the part of WPA workers in rural areas to accept farm work, knowing that the duration of such farm work is indefinite, but it is his opinion that the "Prompt reassignment ruling" will give WPA workers that confidence which will allow them to seek farm work of their own volition. The fact that a worker may have a series of short time private jobs before requesting reassignment will not jeopardize his right to security wage employment when he needs it, the administrator added.

Under instructions from Administrator Miner, Earl W. Clark, state director of employment, advised district WPA offices to cooperate fully with the employment offices in clearing the release of project workers to farm jobs and to prepare to reassign such workers when they are again in need of WPA employment.

Fish Do Not Drink Water

Fish and other aquatic animals do not drink water. Enough moisture is taken into their systems in their food and through their skins so that drinking is not necessary.

Iron Springs to Riches

The hairsprings in watches are made by drawing a piece of steel through a hole in a diamond. A pound of steel, worth only a few dollars, can make $60,000 worth of watch hairsprings.

Billy Rose Vetoes Venus at Cleveland's Exposition

BILLY ROSE, whose two mammoth productions are the feature of the new 1937 Great Lakes Exposition at Cleveland, which continues open for 101 days until September 6, rose in his wrath this week and banned Venus de Milos from his 5,000-seat Aquacade.

"Even if she had arms I wouldn't let her in the chorus," shouted Billy. "She'll have to reduce before she can typify the modern American streamlined beauties who are in my shows."

"What I want is a Greek statue that looks like my No. 1 Aquabelle, Eleanor Holm Jarrett. Take that fat woman from Milos away—Eleanor can tie her hands behind her and beat her any day."

Rose's other show, the Pioneer Palace at the big 150-acre Exposition which has more free attractions than any other ever held, is headed by Tom Patricola. More than 5,000,000 people will visit Cleveland's big show this summer, many camping in Trailer City there.

Greatly Expanded Production Required for Full Recovery

By HAROLD G. MOULTON
President, The Brookings Institution

WASHINGTON — Recovery in the United States has gone far, but it has been marked by two striking characteristics—slowness of the gains in the durable goods industries and the persistence of a great volume of unemployment. At the Brookings Institution, we have made a comprehensive analysis of the American situation which included a detailed study of the production requirements for full recovery. The production task ahead—if standards of living are to be restored even to their former level—is found to be as follows:

1. To make good the actual deterioration of plant and equipment sustained during the depression.
2. To increase productive capital in line with the growth of population.
3. To expand the output of consumption goods in accordance with this growth of population.

The study was made under a grant from the Falk Foundation of Pittsburgh. In it, we sought to estimate how great an increase in output would be required to restore by 1941 a per capita

The recovery movement between 1934 and 1936 was thus soundly based. Production was steadily mounting, purchasing power was being spread broadly among the masses, speculation was not excessive, business men had not stocked up with heavy supplies of goods, and the general balance between production and consumption was satisfactory.

At the end of 1936, therefore, the stage seemed set for a period of great expansion. Production requirements were adequate to absorb all the unemployed. The recovery movement was steadily broadening; the economic system as a whole was in reasonably good balance, and at the same time the possibility of the government balancing its budget appeared somewhat brighter.

Further Expansion Threatened

In recent months, particularly since February, the situation has changed in one vitally important respect. Rapid increases in raw material prices and in wages have laid the basis for an old-time vicious spiral of inflation. While the particular labor groups who receive higher wages may stand to gain for a

"Real" Hourly Earnings in Manufacturing, 1920-36

The above chart illustrates the improvement in "real" hourly earnings of manufacturing workers that took place from 1919 to 1937. Earnings moved upward, while the cost of living went down, making it possible for workers to buy more for their money. This is particularly noticeable in the recovery period since 1932. It should be kept in mind, however, that the average number of hours worked has been substantially reduced in recent years. On the other hand, the buying power of the consumer's dollar has increased somewhat more than is indicated because of improvement in the quality of goods and services used in the cost-of-living index.

level of production and consumption equal to that of 1929. The results of the survey of the situation in the fields of housing and other forms of durable goods, steam railroads, public utilities, industrial enterprises, etc., are striking. It would be necessary to produce such durable goods at the rate of approximately 33 billion dollars annually from 1937 through 1941, as compared with actual production of only 21 billions in 1936, and of 25 billions annually in the boom period between 1925 and 1929.

In other words, to make up for what it did not produce in depression years, and to provide for the needs of an expanding population, the nation would have to produce annually 60 per cent more durable goods than in 1936. Three times as much housing construction would be necessary. In the field of non-durable, consumption goods which are such things as food, clothes, and amusements, such a large expansion would not be needed.

Labor Shortage Might Result

The production program required in the field of durable goods would necessitate—at present working hours—the employment of from 8 to 9 million additional laborers. Making allowance for additional workers needed to produce consumption goods, it appears certain that unless working hours were lengthened, there would be shortages of both skilled and unskilled labor.

Since standards of living cannot be restored to former levels unless productive output is restored, any further shortening of the working week will restrain the expansion of output and thus restrict the raising of standards of living. It should be borne in mind that working hours have been reduced since 1929 by approximately 20 per cent, as compared with only 13 per cent in the preceding 30 years.

The present recovery movement has been marked by steadily increasing wage rates as compared with prices, and this has increased purchasing power among the masses. The employment of more workers as production has expanded has increased the flow of money to the working population; and at the same time those already employed have been able to buy more with their wages. During the same period, profits have been greatly increased from low depression levels as a result of the expansion of output and an increase of efficiency. This efficiency increase has been about in proportion to wage rates.

time, and while the industries in question may temporarily pass on higher costs to consumers, further broad expansion of business activity appears to be threatened.

The advance in the prices of such basic products as iron and steel and other metals, building materials, etc., may hamper expansion of production in certain very important lines. Only recently have the railroads gotten into a financial shape that would permit them to spend much money on new equipment and the building of better roadbed and track. Now, with the price of steel rising, and with wage increases also in prospect, it is doubtful whether the railroads will be able to carry out the extensive programs of rehabilitation which they have planned. Similarly, the building of new houses, apartments, etc., may be held back by the rising prices of building materials. If this turns out to be the case, it will check the reemployment of idle workers, and the attainment of the higher standards of living which are so greatly desired.

Large sections of the population would soon suffer as a result of a rapid rise in prices. Among them are farmers who do not work for wages, individuals on fixed salaries; and those living on incomes from investments. These constitute more than half the total population. Perhaps the most serious phase of the problem is the possibility of a new disparity between industrial and agricultural prices which may result if wages force industrial prices upward.

Stimulation Only Temporary

The adverse effects upon production may be considerably delayed, because a rise in prices usually stimulates business for the time being. With prices going up, business men and others hasten to place orders and buy extra quantities in order to be ahead of the price advance. This speeds up business activity and for a time increases the demand for labor. Such expansion of demand in turn serves to increase the demand for products and to raise prices the more rapidly. In due course, however, price relationships are so disturbed that certain groups of people lose purchasing power. This, in turn, sets in motion forces which tend to reduce prosperity.

Fortunately, the dangers inherent in this situation appear to have been recognized, and efforts are being made by both business and the government to restrain price advances.

Independence Day 1937

By RAYMOND PITCAIRN

National Chairman
Sentinels of the Republic

With a spirit of reverence, as well as of patriotism, America observes this year the 161st anniversary of the Declaration of Independence.

At the same time it commemorates the 150th anniversary of the United States Constitution.

Between these two celebrations there is a close relationship. Together they commemorate the fact that our nation was created and constituted the Land of Freedom.

It was the Declaration of Independence that proclaimed to the world that all men are created free and equal, that they are endowed with certain inalienable rights, that to secure these rights governments are instituted.

It was the Constitution of the United States that gave those principles strength and permanence.

Without that Charter of Liberties, the freedom won by the courage and the self-sacrifice of our fathers would have perished.

To the men who, through those two historic documents, gave substance to our national ideals, all Americans owe a debt of gratitude today.

To realize what they established for us, it is necessary only to consider the growth in area, in prestige and in the well-being of its people that America has achieved.

To realize from what they protected us, it is necessary only to observe the repression of human rights and of the human spirit which today afflicts so many nations abroad.

Independence Day, 1937, thus becomes a dual anniversary. It commemorates our birth as a nation, and it demonstrates that only through the power of human liberty and through government instituted to secure such freedom, can a country progress and endure.

On us rests the responsibility of keeping that spirit alive.

Plainfield spent Wednesday at the home of the former's brother, J. T. White.

Thursday and Friday evenings several from this vicinity motored to Berkeley, Illinois and took part in the W. L. S. Services will be held Sunday night at 8 o'clock in the Congregational church with Rev. H. R. Jay in charge.

Mr. and Mrs. Ralph Waldvogel attended a wedding reception, given in honor of Mr. and Mrs. Fred Frank Saturday night. The reception was held at the home of the groom's sister, Mrs. Michael Weiss in Westmont, Illinois.

Here's Lavish Finale of Billy Rose's Aquacade at Great Lakes Exposition in Cleveland

SPECTACULAR AND COLORFUL are all the scenes of Billy Rose's Aquacade, but the grand finale, seen here, presents vividly the gorgeous costuming and unusual staging typical of the gigantic dancing, singing, swimming production which has won unstinted praise of the critics and the applause of the large crowds visiting the Exposition. The specially created train worn by the central figure in the scene cost $7,000 and its unusual size is evident in comparison with the 160 foot floating stage of Aquacade. Typical of Billy Rose are the miniature battleships seen here plying the waters of Lake Erie. Yes, Canada is the backdrop. The Exposition continues open in Cleveland through Sept. 6. Stars of the Aquacade include Johnny Weissmuller, Eleanor Holm and 500 singing, dancing, swimming beauties, and music for dancing by the audience is played by nine famous orchestras.

THE KICKER

I hate to be a kicker, I always long for peace,
But the wheel that does the squeaking is the one that gets the grease.
It's nice to be a peaceful soul, and not too hard to please,
But the dog that's always scratching is the one that has the fleas.
I hate to be a kicker, means nothing in a show—
For the kickers in the chorus are the ones that get the dough.
The art of soft soap spreading is a thing that palls and stales,
But the guy that wields the hammer Is the one that drives the nails.
Let us not put any notions that are harmful in your head,
But the baby that keeps yelling is the baby that gets fed.

Beverly Cemetery Has Beautiful Location

During the past decade the private burying ground and small unkept cemetery have fallen into desuetude. News From Springfield

By Bernice T. Van der Vries
Representative 7th Senatorial Dist.
General Assembly of Illinois

When Victor Orlander, the secretary of the Illinois Federation of Labor, stepped to the clerk's desk of the House on Wednesday afternoon at the invitation of the Speaker of the House and announced that David R. Clark the legal counsel for the Illinois Manufacturers Association would explain the compromise which had been agreed upon by Labor and Industry on the Unemployment Compensation Bill a wave of relief unusual situation for Mr. Orlander to present Mr. Clark and one which he smilingly admitted. All day and even while Mr. Orlander was speaking telegrams were arriving on the desks of the members of the House from Labor Unions urging that the Bill which had been passed by the Senate providing for an Individual Reserve Plan be changed to a Pooled Plan. The compromise amendments set up a Pooled Plan but on a Merit Rating Basis for the individual employer. This was a concession on the part of Labor to Industry and Industry in return approved an amendment for 16 weeks benefits instead of 13 weeks as provided in the Senate Bill. Illinois is the only state which has not adopted an Unemployment Compensation Law. With the present session so near a close it was a wise procedure for Labor and Industry to work out what appears to be a good law for all concerned.

Many members wished that a compromise could have been worked out on the Women's Eight Hour Day Bill before it was passed in order that it might have been made more flexible for seasonal industries other than canning. This measure would have had the unanimous support of the General Assembly if the voting had been on the principal of shortening hours of labor for women but the voting was on an actual bill. Already labor leaders are predicting that the law will have to be amended in future sessions of the General Assembly.

Two legislative weeks remain in which to untangle a driver's license bill which is involved in a political struggle battle. A conference committee will tackle the problem next week. A similar fight is brewing on the State School Board Bill not yet passed by the House.

A large portion of the time during the remaining days of the Session will be consumed in endless roll calls on Appropriation Bills. The minority party is protesting the passage of un-itemized bills and increased appropriations but without success. So far the appropriations committee has not acted on the bill passed by the Senate increasing the State School Distributive Fund from 13,000,000 to 17,200,000 annually, the increase to go to the high schools. This is one appropriation increase which will not be opposed by the minority party.

All bills in committee have been tabled and probably next Tuesday all bills on first reading will be given the same treatment leaving only second and third reading bills of the two houses to be considered. Even the consideration of all of these will be impossible in the remaining time of the session which must adjourn sine die on June 30th.

Will County 4-H Picnic To Be Held At Wilmington

The 4-H picnic which has been held at the home of Fred Francis at New Lenox the past two years will be held this year at the home of John Piece on Saturday, July 10th. Mr. Piece's place is located on the Kankakee river and to reach it one goes 1/4 mile west of the bridge in Wilmington on U.S. 66 to the south route 113. Turn south on 113 and go 1 mile and the place is on the east side of the road. Watch for signs!

The picnic will start at 1:30 p. m. (C.S.T.) with a soft ball tournament. The winner of this tournament will represent Will County in the Annual Sports Festival to be held later in the summer at the University of Illinois. While the boys are playing softball a program for the girls will be carried out by Miss Helen Bitterman of Wilmington. The river affords an excellent place for swimming and boating. Following the afternoon program will be the picnic supper and then a campfire program. After the campfire, folk dancing and games will be played by everyone. There will be a small stand on the grounds where refreshments might be secured throughout the afternoon and evening. Come out, meet your neighbors and make new friends. If you give your support and co-operation you will be assured a good time.

Aulworm Bros. Operate Up-To-Date Grocery Store

The Aulworm Bros., is a home owned and operated institution. They are conveniently located and offer the people of the territory the very lowest prices on high class meats and groceries. This store is organized along lines that bring an ever increasing business.

The Store is under able and efficient management of men who have spent a great deal of their lives in the grocery business. They see that their stock is replete at all times with food supplies that every housewife asks for and needs. Nationally known brands are carried together with those of local manufacture. If it can be had at all you will find it at this store.

The prices are a result of lower overhead, closer buying, doing a large business and making a small profit on each sale. The quality of their meats, fruits, vegetables and groceries are the very best. They have an enviable reputation for cleanliness, insisting that every thing about their stores be in accordance with the most scientific laws regarding sanitation. They have assured the public that the groceries and meats coming from their store is fresh, pure and wholesome.

But today people are asking more of their grocers than that they be fair and friendly. They are asking for more than fresh fruits, vegetables, meats and groceries. They are asking that these things be priced as low as possible.

The management of Aulworm Bros., invites you to compare their prices with any store in any section. This well known store is located in Blue Island at 13051 South Western Ave. Phone Blue Island 100.

About 100 relatives and friends pleasantly reminded Mr. and Mrs. Dan McAllister of their silver wedding anniversary last Saturday night when they sprung a surprise party at the McAllister home in honor of the event. The honored couple residing at 111th street, were completely surprised, but proved to be royal hosts. A merry time was enjoyed in the small hours of the next morning. The guests enjoyed dancing, the garage floor being used for a dance floor. Plenty of good eats and drinks were served. The guests presented the honored couple with silver gifts as reminders of their quarter of a century of wedded bliss.

As the 4th of July comes on Sunday, it will be celebrated on Monday instead. Business places will remain closed for the day.

Women who follow the recipes of the Food Primer should pay particular attention to the following Lima bean recipes. Almost all food elements are found in cooked dried Limas—and these beans are obtainable in cans the whole year 'round.

With a few cans on your emergency shelf you can prepare a tasty family dish or a surprise guest dish at a moment's notice.
Here are the recipes. Try them all and you will have three new favorites in your home.

Cream of Lima Soup
1 1/2 cups cooked, dried Limas
3/4 small onion, sliced
1 tablespoon fine minced parsley
8 tablespoons butter
1 tablespoon flour
1 teaspoon salt
3/4 teaspoon pepper
1 cup top milk or thin cream

Rub Limas through a coarse sieve. Melt butter, add onion and cook 5 minutes; remove onion, add flour to remaining butter; stir until smooth, add salt and pepper, cream and pureed Limas. Bring to boiling point. A little whipped cream placed in bottom of each cup before pouring in soup is always an improvement to cream soup. Garnish with finely minced parsley.

Lima Salad
1 cup cooked, dried Limas
2 tablespoons minced onion
1/2 cup diced, cooked beets
2 tablespoons finely chopped parsley
1/2 cup French dressing
1 teaspoon Worcestershire sauce
Mix ingredients and chill before serving. Arrange on lettuce.

Limas with Sausage
1/2 pound sausage
1 medium-sized onion
1 cup cooked, dried Limas
1 cup tomatoes
1/2 teaspoon chili
1/2 teaspoon salt
Fry onion and sausage until well done. Add other ingredients and simmer for 30 minutes.

SYNOPSIS

Brooke Reyburn visits the office of Jed Stewart, a lawyer, to discuss the terms of an estate she has inherited from Mrs. Mary Amanda Dane. Unwittingly she overhears Jed talking to Mark Trent, a nephew of Mrs. Dane who has been disinherited. Mrs. Dane had lived at Lookout House, a huge structure on the sea, built by her father and divided into two, for her and Mark's father. Brooke had been a fashion expert, and Mrs. Dane, a "shut-in," hearing her on the radio, had invited her to call and developed a deep affection for her. Mark discloses that Mrs. Dane had threatened to disinherit him if he married Lola, from whom he is now divorced. He says he does not trust Henri and Clotilde Jacques, Mrs. Dane's servants. He says he is not interested in an offer of Brooke's to share the estate with him. Leaving her department store job, Brooke refuses an offer to "go stepping" with Jerry Field, a carefree young man who wants to marry her. At a family conference she learns she must live at Lookout House alone, since Lucette, her younger sister who is taking her job, her brother, Sam, a young playwright, and her mother plan to stay in the city. Jed and Mark are astounded when they hear from Mrs. Gregory, a family friend, that she had witnessed a hitherto unknown will with Henri and Clotilde two weeks before Mrs. Dane died. Brooke had arrived just as she was leaving.

"Destroyed it? But how could Brooke Reyburn have known what was in the first will? Perhaps your aunt had told her that she was to be residuary legatee—it doesn't seem probable, but women do fool things." He grinned. "Of course men never do. We've got to get busy. If it isn't destroyed, that will may be at Lookout House; you've never liked the Jacques and you say that they hate you. I have an idea. Open your house. Live there. Get friendly with the girl."

"I would feel like a sneak to go there to spy on her."

"You suspect that she may have influenced your aunt to make a will in her favor, don't you?"

"I do."

"Then give her a chance to prove that she didn't. Take a couple of Japs and go down and live next door."

"I won't commit myself to that proposition in a hurry. If I decide to do it, will you come with me?"

"Sure, I've been hoping you'd ask me. Philo Vance is my middle name." Stewart picked up the note lying on the desk. "You'd better open the investigation by accepting this."

"The Reyburn girl's invitation to dine on Thanksgiving day? I would feel like a spy, a traitor. The turkey would choke me."

"Do you want the truth about this will?"

"You bet I do."

"Then go. Don't write. We never send a letter when we can send a man. Phone the night before that you are coming. She'll have less time in which to think why you are accepting."

Brooke Reyburn stood in the doorway of the living-room at Lookout House. Behind her in the hall a graceful circular stairway wound up and up. She nodded approval. The room was the perfect setting she had visualized for the duchess of Argyle since the day she had known that her father had willed her the portrait. The green of the walls and trim repeated the color of the satin gown of the woman in the dull gold frame which hung above the mantel of carved black Italian marble, repeated also the shade of the feathers of the dozing parrot in a gilded cage, threw into relief dark polished surfaces of mahogany.

She had had everything that she thought belonged to his family stored in the apartment over the garage. Curious that she had found so little silver.

She looked at the door which Mary Amanda Dane had told her opened into the twin house. Something uncanny about it. Whenever she was in the room it drew her eyes like a magnet. Mark Trent's house was on the other side. It had not been lived in for years. What a waste. Had his wife refused to live there? His wife? She couldn't think of him as having had a wife. Why think of him at all?

She resolutely switched her thoughts to her surroundings. This was the same room in which she had first seen Mrs. Dane in her wheel chair, but how different. Then it had been drab and heavy; now it glowed with soft color. She would never forget the pathos in the woman's eyes as they had met hers, nor the eagerness of her greeting. She had registered a passionate vow to make her lovely and attractive in appropriate clothes. That had been her job—then—and a thrilling job, too, to help women make the most of their good points.

How Mary Amanda Dane had fooled her about money. The crippled woman had kept her feet firmly on the ground when it came to spending. Planning inexpensive, attractive clothes for her had been an exciting challenge. She had succeeded. The frocks had been charming, and with her drab wardrobe the invalid had shed much of her crabbedness. Lovely clothes did that for a woman. Pity that more husbands didn't realize the fact. Now she was gone and had left a small fortune behind her. Why had she denied herself so many of the luxuries of life? Brooke blinked long wet lashes and said aloud, as she had said many times since she had come to live at Lookout House:

"Thank you for everything, Mrs. Mary Amanda. Thanks billions." She swallowed the lump which rose in her throat whenever she thought of the woman's incredible kindness. Hardly the time to go sentimental when at any moment the family might burst in on her. They were on their way to spend Thanksgiving. For the first time they would see the changes in the house; she had postponed their coming until it should be in perfect order.

The honk-honk of an automobile horn outside was followed by voices singing lustily:

"Over the river and through the wood,
Trot fast, my dapple-gray!
Spring over the ground.
Like a hunting hound
For this is Thanksgiving day."

The gay chorus was followed by laughter and vociferous cries:

"Whoa there! Stand still, Lightning! Whoa!"

Laughing, Brooke dashed for the front door. It was so like the Reyburn family to dramatize its arrival.

In a rush of cold air and excited greetings she piloted her mother and sister to the library. The startled parrot shrieked, "Stop! Look! Listen!"

"Boy, you don't need a burglar alarm with that announcer. You ought to loan him to a bank."

Lucette made a gamine face at the parrot as she slipped out of her ocelot coat. She dragged off her hat and patted the swirl of her dark hair.

Brooke hugged her mother. "It's wonderful to have you here, Celia Reyburn, and aren't you devastating in that eel-gray ensemble!"

"Not as devastating as you are in that shimmery white, daughter. It brings out the copper lights in your hair."

Brooke laughed. "We are like two diplomats exchanging compliments, the difference is that ours come from the heart. Where's Sam? Don't tell me Sam isn't coming!"

Lucette held a lighter to a cigarette with a faint hint of bravado.

"Don't cry, darling. Sam came. Didn't you recognize his voice singing as if his little heart would burst from joy as we approached this baronial hall? Doubtless he is kissing his peachy convertible good-night in your garage. He's crazy about that coupe you gave him, Brooke. He has named it Lightning. And can it go! Who's the tall gent with the undertaker expression who pulled our bags from the car as if he were extracting upper and lower molars?"

"Henri. He and his wife, Clotilde, worked for years for Mrs. Dane. I kept them on to help me settle. They take a lot of handling, believe it or not."

"I believe it. This room looks like part of a House Beautiful exhibit. It's corking."

"Wait till you see the rest of the house, Lucette. Here's Sam. I would recognize his bang of a door if I heard it in Timbuctoo. Welcome to Lookout House, Sammy! It's wonderful that the theater closed just at this time."

"Yeah! It's all in the point of view. There are them who think otherwise. However, I'm not kicking."

He caught Brooke in a bearlike hug. He kept his arm about her as he looked around the room.

"Swell joint you've got here. I like the greenhousey smell from those plants. Say listen, we've missed you like the dickens, haven't we, Mother?"

"We have, Sam." Celia Reyburn steadied her voice. "We'd better stop emotionalizing and get ready for dinner. I have kept house years enough to know that promptness at meals helps to keep the homemaker's life's walk easy."

"You would think of that, Mother. It isn't dinner to night. I planned a buffet supper, not being sure at what time my relatives from the big town would arrive. Come upstairs and I'll show you your rooms."

A family might get on each other's nerves, as of course it did at times, but there was nothing like it, Brooke concluded fervently, as after supper on a floor cushion in front of the library fire she leaned against her mother's knees.

Lucette burst out nervously:

"If Sam can stop that nut-munching marathon, perhaps he'll announce the latest Reyburn news flash."

Brooke sat erect. "What news?" Sam took careful aim at the parrot's perch. The nutshell struck its bullseye and roused the dozing bird. "Hell's bells!" he croaked, and ruffled his feathers.

"Looks as if he were caught in a typhoon, doesn't he?" The laughter in Sam's voice vanished. "Mother has been invited to spend the winter in England with her friend Lady Jaffrey."

"Sam!" With the exclamation Brooke was on her feet. "Do you mean it? How perfectly grand! She lives in an old castle, doesn't she?" "Hey, pipe down, Brooke. There's a nigger in the woodpile. Wait till you hear the condition."

"A condition in Lady Jaffrey's invitation, Sam? I can't believe it."

"Be quiet, children. Let me talk." Arms crossed on the back of the wing chair in which she had been sitting, Celia Reyburn faced her family. Her cheeks were pink; her eyes, as blue as her son's, were brilliant with excitement. She clasped her hands tightly as if to steady them.

"The chair recognizes the lady from the big city," Sam encouraged with a grin.

"What's the condition, Mother? Don't you want to go?"

"Very, very much, Brooke, but I shouldn't enjoy a moment of the visit if I left your brother and sister in that apartment alone. Perhaps I'm a selfish woman, but I would like to and will go, if my mind is perfectly at ease about Lucette and Sam. If they will come here to you, and if you will have them—"

"Have them! Mother, don't be foolish! I have been rattling around in this big house like a dried coconut in a shell. Of course I want them—but will they come?"

"Who's being foolish now?" Lucette flung her cigarette into the fire. Her cheeks were almost as red as her painted lips. "Of course we'll come, Brooke Reyburn. Of course we'll play ball Mother's way. Sam and I aren't cold-blooded fish. If taking to the sticks to be chaperoned by big sister will make Mother's visit happier, we'll settle down here with bells on. She's earned all the fun she can get. She'll have one grand time and mow those stiff Brits down in swaths and come home Countess Whoosit, or I miss my guess."

"Lucette!" Celia Reyburn protested indignantly.

"Don't mind her Mother," Brooke reassured. "By the time you return your younger daughter will have acquired all the social graces—"

"Just a minute! Now I make a condition. I come only if I keep on with my job."

"It would mean early and late commuting, Lucette."

"I've thought that out. In Sam's convertible we can make it."

"But you and Sam won't be coming down at the same time, and—"

"Don't be so sure, Brooke," Sam aimed a nutshell at the parrot. "The theater has closed permanently and I'm up against one of those simple economic problems, where's the next job coming from? I'll go to New York to see off Mother and take my play. Now that producers have begun to sniff around for bargains, I may get my chance."

"Sam—dear—" Brooke attempted to lighten her dismayed voice. Bad enough for him to be out of work without having her turn sob-sister. "You'll find something. I read the other day that the theater is on the up-grade. If you don't—oh, Sammy, what a chance for you to write! Why not give your play a try-out here? We'll do it for the town's welfare fund, in the Club House theater. What a chance to try 'Islands Arise' on the dog!"

"News flash! The Reyburns stage a play!" Lucette cut in.

"Why not?" Brooke persisted eagerly. "Most of the summer homes are to be kept open during the winter and—Answer the phone, will you, Sam? Take the message for me. I've been pestered to death by tradespeople and insurance agents wanting to sell me something. Tell them I'm out of town for the evening—anything."

The silence of the room was broken only by the snap and hiss of the fire as Sam Reyburn put the receiver of the handset to his ear.

"Hulloa.—Yes.—Miss Reyburn is out of town for the evening.—Sure, she'll be back tomorrow.—Oh, it is!—Yes, I'll give her your message. She'll be pleased purple.—I get you. I'll tell her. Bye!" He laid the phone on the stand.

"Who was it, Sam? What will please me purple?" Brooke demanded uneasily.

"A party by the name of Trent."

"What did he want?"

"Not much. Only to say that he accepted your invitation for Thanksgiving dinner with pleasure."

Lesson for July 4

LESSON TEXT—Exodus 1:6-14; 2:23-25.
GOLDEN TEXT—Before they call, I will answer; and while they are yet speaking, I will hear.—Isaiah 65:24.

PRIMARY TOPIC—A Prayer for Help.
JUNIOR TOPIC—In Need of Help.
INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—What Cries Rise to God Today?
YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—God Cares When a People Suffers.

Independence day—and we are to study about a people in bondage! How much that is like life. But, thanks be to God, no one need stay in bondage. The way to liberty is open and free. The Lord Jesus Christ opened it at Calvary's tree and anyone who is still the bond slave of Satan may make this a great and glorious Independence day by now declaring his faith in the deliverer of our souls!

We begin today a series of lessons in the book of Exodus which reveal the high and mighty hand of God working on behalf of his people. Many are the precious spiritual lessons and rich is the practical instruction for daily life to be received in the weeks just ahead. Let us not make the unfortunate mistake of many thoughtless folk who miss the blessing of Bible school attendance because it is a bit warmer than usual.

The family of Jacob—or, as the Bible calls them, "the children of Israel"—prospered in Egypt particularly as long as Joseph and the rulers who remembered him were alive. But they soon learned one of life's bitter lessons, namely, that—

I. Prosperity Often Brings Opposition (1:6-11).

The Hebrews were a peaceful, law-abiding people. They were God's chosen people and as he blessed them they prospered, and thus innocently they brought upon themselves the hatred of the suspicious Egyptians.

Prosperity is never an unmixed blessing. We as a nation know that to be true. Not only does it lead to a certain softening of the sinews, but all too often it results in a weakening of the moral fiber, which makes man easy prey to the attack of the enemy of our souls.

The Egyptians made plans which appealed to their brilliant leaders as politic and wise, but they reckoned without God, and the burdens and afflictions they placed on the Israelites only served to bring further blessing.

II. Adversity May Bring Blessing (vv. 12-14).

The people of Israel did not know it and undoubtedly did not appreciate the fact that the bitterness of their bondage was a blessing in disguise. Note that—

1. It kept them separate as a people. Affliction often serves to keep God's people separated from the world.

2. It disciplined them and prepared them for the hardships of their wilderness journey. We too do well to remember that "whom the Lord loveth he chasteneth," and that if we are properly "exercised" thereby our sorrows may yield rich fruit in our lives.

3. It threw them back upon God. Many are the saints of God who have found that the fiery trial, the burden so hard to understand or some affliction of their body has caused them to bring their burden to the Lord. We have traveled far on the road of faith when we have reached the place where we learn that "Man's extremity is God's opportunity."

They had only one place to turn. They were hemmed in on every side but, as ever, they found that the way up no man can close. They called on their God.

III. Prayer Always Brings God's Answer (2:23-25).

Does God really know when his people suffer? Does he really care? Yes, he does. "They cried," and "God heard" and "remembered." That's all we need to know. The groanings of his people had already stirred God's gracious and tender heart. But he waited to hear their cry before he answered. Such is the law of prayer. May we not forget it. Far too often we turn to everyone and everything else, and finally, in desperation, to God. Why not turn to him first?

As we opened this lesson with an appeal for all who knew not Christ as Saviour to make this the day of their Declaration of Independence, so we close by appealing to all God's children to let him make their ears as sensitive as his to the cry of the oppressed, that this national holiday may find every Christian citizen tender in heart and liberal in deed toward the oppressed.

Conduct Through Life

I will govern my life, and my thoughts, as if the whole world were to see the one, and to read the other; for what does it signify, to make anything a secret to my neighbor, when to God (who is the searcher of our hearts) all our privacies are open?

Submissive Will

The will can only be made submissive by frequent self-denials, which must keep in subjection its sallies and inclinations.

AROUND the HOUSE

Items of Interest to the Housewife

Keeping Peeled Apples.—Peeled apples can be kept white until used by keeping them immersed in water to which a little salt has been added.

Removing Peach Stains.—Fresh peach stains can be removed from linen with a weak solution of chloride of lime.

Fire Prevention.—To avoid fires keep all cleaning cloths that have been treated with oil in a covered metal container.

Cheese Molds.—Pour 1½ cups milk over 2 cups soft breadcrumbs; add 3 well-beaten eggs, 1 heaped cupful grated cheese, 1 teaspoonful salt, pepper to taste, and 1 tablespoonful melted butter. Pour into buttered molds and bake from 20 to 30 minutes in a moderate oven.

Washing White Gloves.—White gloves can be kept white by washing them after each wearing with a soft brush and a pure soap.

Preserving Broom.—Soaking a broom in boiling salt water every two weeks will help preserve it.

Orange Peel Marmalade.—Take six orange rinds, or four orange, two grapefruit or orange and lemon rinds, cover with water and pinch of soda, cook till tender; drain. Take out white pulp with spoon. Put rinds through chopper, yielding two cups chopped rind, add water to cover, about two cups; add sugar, about two cups; simmer slowly for three hours. Bottle in the usual way.

Picking Raspberries.—Red raspberries will keep better if picked early in the morning.

Luncheon Dish.—Boil 2 pounds spinach, press out all moisture, and chop fine. Have ready ½ pound cooked macaroni and 2 hard-boiled eggs cut into slices. Well grease a pie dish, put in a layer of macaroni, sprinkle with grated cheese, and season with pepper and salt. Then put a layer of spinach with sliced eggs on top. Repeat the layers and pour in a little milk. Cover with a thick layer of breadcrumbs with pieces of butter on top. Bake for 10 minutes.

The Title "Junior"

According to Emily Post "Junior" always means the son or grandson of a man of the same name and "Second" means the nephew or cousin of a man of the same name. The son of a "Junior" of the same name is called "Third." It is improper for a man to continue adding "Junior" to his name after the death of his senior, or to call a boy "Third" if either the "Senior" or "Junior" has died.

PETER AND WINSOME BLUEBIRD GOSSIP

TO GOSSIP is to talk about other people and what they are doing or what they have done or what they are going to do. Peter Rabbit and Winsome Bluebird were gossiping in the dear Old Brier Patch. Winsome sat in a little cherry tree and right under him sat Peter. Winsome had just arrived from way down South to spread the glad news that Mistress Spring was on her way and would soon reach the Green Meadows, the Green Forest, and the Smiling Pool. You see Winsome is the herald of Mistress Spring and keeps just a little way ahead of her. When the little meadow and forest people first see his beautiful blue coat, or hear his soft, sweet whistle, they know that Mistress Spring is surely on the way and not very far behind, and then great joy fills their hearts. First comes gentle Sister South Wind to prepare the way, then Winsome Bluebird, and after him beautiful Mistress Spring.

So He Sat and Rested, and While He Rested He Gossiped With Peter Rabbit.

Peter Rabbit was brimful of curiosity, just as he always is. You see it was a long time since he had last seen Winsome Bluebird and all the other birds who had gone to the faraway south when the leaves began to drop in the fall, and, of course, he wanted to know all about his old friends and neighbors, how they were, what they had been doing and when they were coming back. And Winsome wanted to know all about how Peter and Reddy Fox and all the other little people who hadn't gone to the beautiful south had spent the winter. So there was a great deal to talk about. Yes, indeed, there was a great deal to talk about. Winsome felt that he ought to be flying about over the Green Meadows and the Green Forest, where other little people could see him and hear him and so know that he had arrived, but he had traveled a very, very great distance and he was tired, and so he sat and rested, and while he rested he gossiped with Peter Rabbit.

"Is O' Mistah Buzzard on his way here?" asked Peter eagerly.

"Not yet," replied Winsome. "He won't start until after he is sure that Mistress Spring has got here." Peter looked a little disappointed for there is nothing that he enjoys more than to watch Mistah Buzzard sail around and around, way, way up in the blue, blue sky. He is rather fond of O' Mistah Buzzard, is Peter Rabbit, for big as he is, Mistah Buzzard never offers to hurt any of the very little people, not even little Danny Meadow Mouse.

"Why isn't he starting right away?" he asked.

"Well, you see," replied Winsome, "Mistah Buzzard doesn't like the cold."

"But it isn't cold now!" interrupted Peter. "Why, this isn't cold at all. You ought to have been here when it really was cold—when the Smiling Pool and the Laughing Brook were covered with ice and the Green Meadows and the Green Forest were all white with snow, and poor Mrs. Grouse was a prisoner under the hard, icy crust. Then it was cold! Why, this isn't cold at all."

Winsome Bluebird ruffled up his feathers just a little. It was almost like a shiver. "This is cold enough for me!" said he. "Tell me about poor Mrs. Grouse, Peter. Did she get out?"

"You tell me about O' Mistah Buzzard first, and how he spends the winter, and then I'll tell you about poor Mrs. Grouse," replied Peter.

"All right," said Winsome. "There isn't a great deal to tell, but I'll do the best I can."

FIRST-AID TO AILING HOUSE

By ROGER B. WHITMAN

SQUEAKY STAIRS

THE treads and risers of a flight of stairs are supported in grooves cut into the side pieces. They are held in the grooves by slender wedges glued into place. With shrinkage, the wedges loosen, and there may be a squeak as they slide in the grooves when stepped on. In springing away from the riser, there is still more of a squeak when a weight on a tread forces it back into place.

When the under side of a staircase is open, as it may be when over a cellar stair, a squeak can be taken out by driving the wedges more tightly and securing them by nailing. Light finishing nails can be used, and they need not go all the way in.

When the under side is not exposed, a squeak can be taken out by preventing a tread from moving on top of its riser. The first step in this is to take off the strip of molding that is under the overhanging front edge. A wedge, such as the thin end of a shingle, is then driven in between the upper edge of a riser and the tread above. The tread will thus be prevented from moving. The wedge is cut off and the molding returned.

When a staircase is open on one side, it occasionally happens that the outside side-piece becomes warped and springs away from the treads and risers. It is sometimes possible to force the side piece back into place by wedging against an opposite wall. This, however, is a job that should be undertaken by a carpenter who is familiar with stair construction.

GRAPHIC GOLF

By BEST BALL

A PUTTING SUGGESTION.

THERE is much to be said for that method of putting which will insure, insofar as possible, the golfer keeping his attention on actually hitting the ball. Generally speaking there are so many things for the player to worry about on the green, such as the proper speed, the path to take, etc., that the attention is diverted along numerous channels and as a result the putt is not a decisive one.

Naturally these are problems that must be contended with but the player would be better off if he quit worrying and stroked the ball accurately and smoothly. It is wise to learn a putting technique that will cast aside these annoying angles. One of the best methods to follow is described here and, besides proving an excellent method of putting, it will also prove a remedy for putting ills when other styles are proving troublesome. The process is as simple as it is efficient. Merely select the line the ball is to follow, then align the clubface square to this line. As the actual stroke is made, think of nothing but striking the ball accurately along the line you have picked out. The method sounds easy and is, but requires considerable concentration. The important factor is to keep the mind focused on actually stroking the ball and not on problems the ball may have to contend with later.

BETTER RESULTS IN PUTTING COME FROM

SELECTING PROPER LINE BALL IS TO FOLLOW

THEN ALIGNING CLUBFACE SQUARE TO BALL AND STROKING IT STRAIGHT ALONG LINE

Had We Not Dreamed

By DOUGLAS MALLOCH

HAD we not dreamed, we never would have known
The fortune that came to us was our own.

Who leans on luck and who depends on chance
May meet it and may pass it with a glance.

But we have dreamed, and they who dream create,
And they shall know, however long they wait,

This is their child, and, whether wealth or fame,
May take possession and may give it name.

Had we not dreamed, how poor the world would be,
Only the finished thing to ever see,
Only the finished thing to ever know,
Not plant the seed, and tend, and watch it grow.

But we have dreamed, and they who dream are blessed
With the whole pleasure of the thing possessed.

Some buy their houses, but are never thrilled,
Because, to love them, they must dream, then build.

Had we not dreamed, but little would be done.
Naught is completed that is not begun.

It must be visioned long before its time—
Peaks seen from valleys, and men start to climb.

But we have dreamed, and they who dream will do;
Who has a dream will make the dream come true.

For nothing is but something once has seemed,
That never would have been, had we not dreamed.

Antelope Hat

Stamp blue is the color of this flattering antelope hat. The slightly draped crown is open in the center from front to back. The bird is of brilliant red antelope. A double sawtooth edging of self material and white pique trims the frock.

shown by the formation of the third finger, which in the type described indicates that its possessor holds high promise of worth-while accomplishment along creative lines.

The Inventive Finger of Brilliance. The predominant characteristics of this type are (1) squareness, (2) resilience under pressure, (3) pronounced inclination or tilt of the finger toward the fourth or little finger.

This type is sometimes found rather full in structure, but is never overfleshed. Its length is often marked and is usually even with that of the second finger or nearly so. The underside of the nail tip is often spatulate in shape, with pad-like cushions of flesh which sometimes extend beyond the sides of the nail, which is quite square and firmly set. With the hand extended wide, the finger is found to lie in fairly close proximity to the second finger.

You may quite safely conclude that the owner of a third finger of this type is of a decidedly inventive turn of mind and indefatigable in working out original ideas in a practical manner.

MANY LETTERS Addressed to You Personally

THINK of the advertisements in this paper as so many letters addressed to you personally. That's what they're intended to be, and, actually, that's what they are. This newspaper is, in effect, a mail-bag which brings you news of events and news of the best merchandise at the fairest prices.

You don't throw away letters unread. You don't read three or four letters carefully and skim through the rest. Treat the "merchandise letters" in this newspaper the same way. Read them all. Read them carefully. One single item will often repay you for the time it has taken to read them all.

Many good housekeepers have formed the habit of reading their newspaper with a pencil and paper, ready to jot down the articles they wish to look at when they start out on their shopping tour. Try this method. It saves time, and saves money, and provides you with the pick of the day's merchandise.
